

Website I used

<http://www.mess.be/inickgenwuname.php>

Screenshots of steps in PuTTY

Step 1: I used the “-I” command to return the server response from the header.

A screenshot of a PuTTY terminal window titled "atria.cs.odu.edu - PuTTY". The terminal shows the command "curl -I http://www.mess.be/inickgenwuname.php" being executed. The output is a series of HTTP headers: "HTTP/1.1 200 OK", "Date: Fri, 27 Jan 2017 04:37:00 GMT", "Server: Apache/2.2.29 (Unix) mod_ssl/2.2.29 OpenSSL/1.0.1e-fips mod_bwlimited/1.4", "X-Powered-By: PHP/5.4.39", and "Content-Type: text/html". The prompt "atria:~>" is visible at the bottom with a green cursor.

```
atria:~> curl -I http://www.mess.be/inickgenwuname.php
HTTP/1.1 200 OK
Date: Fri, 27 Jan 2017 04:37:00 GMT
Server: Apache/2.2.29 (Unix) mod_ssl/2.2.29 OpenSSL/1.0.1e-fips mod_bwlimited/1.4
X-Powered-By: PHP/5.4.39
Content-Type: text/html

atria:~>
```

Step 2: The “-F” command generates a form so that I can test how the input works on the site. In this instance, “realname” is the value assigned to variable “name.” I found this by viewing the source code for the website:

<form action="/inickgenwuname.php" METHOD="POST">
  <input type="text" name="realname" size=25>&nbsp;
  <input type="submit" value="Enter the Wu-Tang" name="Submit">

</form>
```

Therefore, when I set “Michelle” as the “realname,” a new name should be generated!

```
atria.cs.odu.edu - PuTTY
atria:~> curl -F 'realname=Michelle' http://www.mess.be/inickgenwuname.php
```

Step 3: Shows that typing in, “Michelle,” yields the desired results!

I verified this by testing it on the actual website:
